Conference summary

- Everyone has a part to play in acting on ACEs but we all have the power to facilitate healing, recovery and kindness
- The language of ACEs resonates with all of us in both in our professional and personal lives
- We are all humans, we need to connect with someone or something
- ACEs is not a single episode of toxic stress for children, it's a chronic environment of toxic stress
- We need to break the cycle of adversity by providing hope to adults and children
- We are at a tipping point, we all came together for a reason let's make it count
- Use our learning from today to help drive the emerging national agenda and in the absence of a national policy we will continue to pioneer our approach in Gloucestershire and share the learning
